People-centric management: Ultimate art or illusion?

For most leaders, good management, with people as its central concern, is both a necessary precondition and an aspiration – it's the ultimate art. Yet, Peter Drucker, the founder of modern management theory and practice, unmistakably described current reality: "So much of what we call management consists in making it difficult for people to work." The gap is apparent. Between the good intent and management at scale in organisations, the ultimate art turns into an illusion. This reminds us of Sumantra Ghoshal's warning in his influential 2005 essay, "Bad management theories are destroying good management practices". Other researchers added specifics to his point, the combination of prevalent agency theory, transaction cost theory, game theory, negotiation analysis and similar theories have resulted in dehumanized managerial practices. Top-down, hierarchical control and shareholder value obsession are only two of the outcomes. Recent management scandals are a testimony to the unintended but widely noticeable consequences.

In the meantime, management theory and practice are moving on and continue to evolve. At the 2015 Global Drucker Forum, Henry Mintzberg, in his seminal remark, reminded us of this simple but often neglected truth "I'm not a human resource, not a human asset, and certainly not human capital. I'm a human being". There are visible signs that teamwork, self-organisation, collaboration, remote work, and blurred organisational boundaries are becoming the norm rather than the exception.

It is no coincidence that the topic also gets a strong tail wind from the recent rise and recognition of behavioral economics. Richard Thaler winning last year's Nobel prize in economics has the potential to mark an inflection point in the development of management theory and practice. Will "Homo oeconomicus" become "Homo sapiens" again? Or, put another way, as Richard Straub, President and Founder of the Global Drucker Forum quotes Shagun Tripathi "What would robots do if humans took over?"

This reminds us that our global economy, technological development, and business performance are not a given. They are the results of human choice. And so is good management.

Global Peter Drucker Forum 29–30 November 2018

The 10th anniversary of the Drucker Forum will be celebrated in the Hofburg in Vienna on November 29 and 30. On November 28 pre-conference events will be accessible for conference participants, including executive round tables and exclusive workshops with leading speakers.

The leitmotiv of the Forum 2018 – management. the human dimension – homes in on the human-centric philosophy on Peter Drucker. If taken seriously this philosophy requires a re-framing of key management issues of the day – the social responsibility of companies, the impact of digital technology (social networks, AI etc.) and liberating human potential. It is therefore timely for the 2018 joint SMG & Drucker Forum Leadership Meeting to offer a first glimpse of what will be discussed at the Forum later this year with leading practitioners such as Jean-Dominique Senard (CEO Michelin), Young K. Sohn (President Samsung Electronics), Paul Polman (CEO Unilever), Isabelle Kocher (CEO Engie), Hermann Hauser (Amadeus Capital), Tim Brown (CEO Ideo) and world renowned writers and thinkers, among them Rosabeth Moss Kanter, Clayton Christensen, Herminia Ibarra, Lynda Gratton, Fredmund Malik, Roger L. Martin, Dave Ulrich, Linda Hill and Marshall Goldsmith. More info on www.druckerforum.org.

Program

Tuesday, 19 June 2018, 16.30–20.30, Zurich

At our 2018 Leadership Meeting we will discuss, what good, people-centric management looks like – and how this ultimate art can become part of reality and more than an illusion. The panelists will explore what digitalisation, agility, and ongoing transformations do with us as people. As management is interaction, there will be plenty of opportunity to ask questions and share ideas.

Andrew Hill

Management Editor Financial Times

Andrew Hill is an Associate Editor and Management Editor of the “Financial Times”. He writes a weekly column on business, strategy and management. His book “Leadership in the Headlines” was published in 2016.

Since joining the FT in 1988, Andrew has worked in various roles, including editor of the daily Lombard column on British business and finance, Financial Editor, Comment & Analysis Editor, New York Bureau Chief, Foreign News Editor, and correspondent in Brussels and Milan.

He was named Business Commentator of the Year 2016 in the Editorial Intelligence Comment Awards and Best Commentator at the 2009 Business Journalist of the Year Awards, where he also received the Decade of Excellence Award for sustained achievement in business and financial journalism.

Gerhard Fehr

Behavioral Economist,
CEO of FehrAdvice & Partners

Gerhard is an applied Behavioral Economist and Executive Behavioral Designer. His personal mission is to motivate companies with inspiration to transform themselves to adopt an experimental culture. His passion: #Experimentability #BehavioralEconomics and #IrrationalLeadership – among these hashtags you will also find him in the most important (social)media. As a Behavioral Designer, he is a personal advisor to many politicians, boards of directors, CEOs and top corporate management. And last but not least: Gerhard seeks with FehrAdvice to become the European market leader in digitization and experimentation. Why? Because successful digitization seems to be very unlikely without experiments.

Prof. Bill Fischer

Professor of Innovation
Management at IMD

Bill Fischer co-founded and co-directs the IMD program on Driving Strategic Innovation, in cooperation with the Sloan School of Management at MIT and authors a regular column for Forbes.com entitled “The Ideas Business”.

An engineer by training, New Yorker by birth, Bill has lived much of his life in Asia and Europe. He has worked in innovation as a development engineer in industry, oversaw aerospace research projects, consulted for 17 years to the World Health Organization, was co-founder of a startup sold to Deloitte (and is presently on the Advisory Boards of two other startups), held an endowed chair at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill (1976–1998) and was the Executive President and Dean of the China Europe International Business School (CEIBS) 1997–1999. Bill first moved to China in 1980. He has been at IMD for over 20 years.

CEO Vontobel

Dr. Zeno Staub is Chief Executive Officer at Vontobel Group since May 2011. Having joined Vontobel in 2001 he went on to serve as its Chief Financial Officer until 2006. Prior to his current position he was Head of Asset Management and Head of Investment Banking. He started his career as a founding shareholder and managing partner of Almafin AG, working in consulting and software development with a focus on risk management, asset & liability management and legal reporting. He then moved to BZ Informatik AG (now avaloq) in 2000 as a member of the Executive Board. Zeno Staub studied economics at the University of St. Gallen, receiving his PH.D. in 1997.
